

Edwina Bartholomew

Television Broadcaster & MC

Edwina Bartholomew is a journalist with over 10 years' experience working in television and radio. In that time, she has covered everything from courts to crime to crocodile egg collecting in the Northern Territory. Polished, professional and approachable, Edwina is the perfect MC for corporate events.

Edwina enjoys one of the most diverse roles at the Seven Network. 2016 saw her relinquish her role as weather presenter to join Sunrise hosts David Koch and Samantha Armytage, Mark Beretta and Natalie Barr in the studio. Edwina also co-hosts Dancing with the Stars, reports for Seven Sport and files longer investigative stories for the network's flagship current affairs program, Sunday Night.

More about Edwina Bartholomew:

Edwina completed her journalism degree at Charles Sturt University in Bathurst and later studied a Master of International Relations at Sydney University. She won her very first job with Sunrise in a competition in 2003. Since then, Edwina has done pretty much every role on the show from making coffee to producing to hosting.

Never one to shy away from adventure, Edwina has skydived, bungee jumped and abseiled off a 33-storey building all live on air. Her work has taken her to Peru, Canada, the US, Mexico, Dubai, Spain, East Timor, the Solomon Islands, New Zealand - and right around Australia on a continuous 40,000km 'Lap of the Map' for Sunrise.

Edwina has also worked as a reporter for Prime News Orange, Radio 2GB and Seven News Sydney. An accomplished presenter, Edwina has hosted corporate events for the Royal North Shore Hospital, Metcash and the NSCA Foundation.

Born in the South Australian mining town of Whyalla, Edwina spent her early years living in Japan and Malaysia.
