Fifi has been a major player in Australian radio for the last 16 years. Having started work as a radio producer Fifi has a good solid grounding in what makes entertainment work.

Fifi was already an established radio personality before she danced her way into the hearts of Australians in 2007 on Seven's Dancing with the Stars. Her vivacious personality not only charmed the tough judges but so impressed the network executives she took over the prestigious weather presenter job on Sunrise before moving onto Entertainment Editor. Due to her popularity, she was asked to return to Dancing with the Stars, All Stars edition, in 2021.

On top of her radio and TV work, Fifi has shared the trials and tribulations of her own life in a weekly opinion column for News Limited's Sunday magazine.

Australian radio and television audiences know Fifi is genuine and generous - she shared her pregnancy with her listeners and viewers and was inundated with congratulations when beautiful Beatrix Belle was born in April 2013. The euphoric mother soon featured on the cover of a weekly magazine sans makeup with a private photo from Twitter, winning even more admiration from Australian women.

In 2019, Fifi gave birth to her second daughter, Daisy-Belle Box.

Fifi again became a symbol of strength and advocate for single mothers in Australia with her willingness to speak about conceiving via IVF and struggles with Hyperemesis Gravidarum (HG) throughout the pregnancy.

Now calling on her expert advice as a mother to two young girls, in 2019 Fifi was handpicked as ambassador for the trusted and renowned Australian children's supplement brand Pentavite, which has been dedicated to children's health for over 50 years. The campaign which rolled out on Australian screens and airwaves, features Fifi and daughter Trixie.

Fifi lives in Melbourne with her two daughters and dog, Lizzie.
